

Mother who saw baby's pram fall under train thought baby had died.

Miss Verma, from Melbourne in Australia, said: "I thought I'd lost my child, who I love more than anyone or anything else. "It was a life and death fear."

She had taken the pushchair brake off to get ready to board the train but momentarily let go of the buggy to pull her trousers up a bit.

Describing how the incident happened she said: "It was the first time I had travelled on a train with him, but I thought it would be all right.

"I had the brake on, but as the train approached I began preparing myself. I took the brake off and my hands left the pram for a fraction of a second and suddenly it was flying off the platform." Her voice shaking, she added: "There was a downward slope on the platform and it rolled away so quickly I couldn't catch it. I tried to grab it but it had gone.

"All I remember is that my first reaction was to grab for the pram. "I was about to jump down after it then everything went blank. "Everything was so fast and terrifying. I was crying 'What has happened to my baby, my baby, my baby!"

Then she heard his screams.

She added: "The first feeling was 'My baby is alive!' "It was the most incredible moment I have ever experienced.

"All I could think was, 'I want to see him. I want to know how he is.'

"We lifted Saurish out and then I was holding him in my arms.

"People were saying I shouldn't be doing that in case there were any internal injuries, but by that stage I wasn't going to let him go.

"He was still crying, but he was with the person he was most familiar with. He seemed to know, 'I'm ok now, I'm in my mother's arms.'

"I was crying. I'd been thinking, 'Oh God!' And now all I could say was, 'Thank you God! You have taken good care of him and it is because of your grace that he is in my arms.'"

Saurish was rushed to hospital but stunned doctors released him less than an hour later with just a couple of minor cuts and bruises.
